FRANKFORT MARDI GRAS GOES OVER BIG

The Mardi Gras sponsored by the Frankfort Civic Club in the Frankfort school gym last Friday and Saturday nights was a very successful affair.

The large gym was turned into an interesting exhibition hall. The Clover Farm store, Meadow Gold, Clarence E. Beagley exhibits were quite outstanding. In addition there was a souvenir booth which did quite a thriving business.

Right off of the gym there was a refreshment room where soft drinks, hamburgers, etc., were on sale.

Up stairs in one of the school rooms there was a very excellent quilt and rug exhibit in which almost every conceivable type of rug was shown. There were many very fine rag rug designs and quilts.

In connection with the quilt exhibit Mrs. Milton Geuther of Mokena had a unique display of craft work showing to what many and varied uses crepe paper is used. Excellent replicas of fruit made of crepe paper were among the articles shown.

Saturday evening, although the weather was quite cold, there was a halloween parade in which the Frankfort Boy Scout Troop, the Frankfort Fire Department, the Frankfort and Mokena Bands and quite a group of young folks in masks and costumes, participated. After marching thru the main streets of the town, the group returned to the school gym. The bands were heard in a number of selections.

At the close of the grand march in the school gym prizes were awarded. Later in the evening dancing was enjoyed.

Arthur Lambrecht served as master of ceremonies.

The Mardi Gras was one of the first major events to be sponsored by the Frankfort Civic Club for the Fall and Winter season.

Check Autos For Drivers License

The State Highway Police are putting on an intensive drive checking up on auto drivers to see whether they have a drivers license. Tuesday State Police stationed at 159th and Wolf road in Orland township stopped cars and trucks at the intersection and asked all the drivers to produce their drivers licenses and those who failed to have such license with them were given tickets to appear before Judge Ray Brennan of Orland township, 159th and Kean ave. One truck driver stopped at the intersection named had a drivers license but failed to have a chauffers license and was arrested on the latter charge.

Infant Dies

The infant daughter born to Mr. and Mrs. Corwin McClain of New Lenox on Wednesday, October 25th, died Friday. Private funeral service from the F. Dames Funeral Home in Joliet. Burial was in Maplewood cemetery at St. Elmo, Ill.

Besides the baby's parents, she is survived by two sisters and one brother.

Scouts Take Exam.

Scout commissioner Truman Daniels attended Mokena scout meeting Monday night and gave the scout troops their tenderfoot examination. The following boys passed the tenderfoot test:

David Rabinor, Norman Williams, Billy Bruns, Ludwig Muehler, Bob Homering, George Rinke, Stanly Bandry, Gordon Clenenger and Hobart Meyers.

The scout committee met with Mr. Daniels after the scout meeting.

Report Snowfall

Mokena commuters working in Chicago, report a quite heavy fall of snow there and as far out as Blue Island. Only a few flakes were seen in Mokena, altho a slight snow was noticed last week.

Wins Prize

The National Livestock and Meat Board held a meeting and demonstration at the Elk's Club in Joliet, Ill., October 26th which Walter Mieserbrink attended.

A true or false contest was staged of which 25 meat dealers took part. The questions pertained to the cuts of meats, cookery and the food value of meats. Walter was awarded the first prize, a 12-inch steak knife.

Frankfort Couple Married Sixty Years

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Krusemark well known residents of Frankfort have had the happy privilege of journeying life's pathway together for sixty years and in honor of this anniversary they will hold

"open house" to their relatives and friends on Monday, November 6th from two to five o'clock in the afternoon and from seven to nine o'clock in the evening. No invitations are being sent.

Mokena Church Group Entertains 160 Women

On last Thursday, October 26, the Ladies' Aid, and the Ruth Society of the local Immanuel Lutheran Church were host to some 150 ladies at a luncheon given in the St. John's Church Parlors. The guests came from Blue Island, Chicago, Tinley Park, Orland Park and Joliet. They arrived by cars, bus and train. The luncheon was served at one o'clock and was followed by a program which lasted until four o'clock. The local Ladies' Aid served a luncheon with chicken a la king as the main course. The Ruth Society provided the entertainment the theme of which was the human side of the Reformation period. The program closed with a beautiful pageant "The Banner of the Cross," an interpretation of Luther's Coat of Arms. The guest speaker for this occasion was Pastor Alvaro Carino, a native of the Philippine Islands, who presented a dramatic picture of life in his native country. Well dinied and well entertained the guests left, loud in their praises for an afternoon well spent.

Mokena Garden Club Meets Nov. 7

The next meeting of the Mokena Garden Club will be held in the home of Mrs. Ida Benson on Thursday, November 7th. Plans for the planting of shrubs on the Pioneer Memorial Cemetery are to be completed at the next meeting and all members are urged to be present to give that important matter their attention.

To Dedicate Field Piece

The Tinley Park Post, of the American Legion, Department of Illinois, will dedicate the Field-piece, as a Memorial, in the parkway on Oak Park Avenue, Sunday, November 12, 1939 at 2:30 o'clock. The following organizations of the Community, will take part in the program:

Tinley Park Business Men's Club.
Tinley Park Civic Club.
Tinley Park Garden Club.
The American Legion Auxiliary.
These organizations and many other features will make an interesting program that you cannot afford to miss. Everybody is invited to attend this program. More news next week.

Where Your Red Cross Dollar Will Be Used

As was stated in last Friday's Bulletin 50c of every membership dollar (or more) will be used to help local needs. Besides that it is well to remember that the entire contribution of an organization will stay in the Mokena chapter treasury.

Annual Red Cross membership dues are small. They start at one dollar. But that dollar, multiplied by millions of members, makes possible all the normal peacetime activities designed to alleviate and prevent human suffering.

For instance, during the past year that dollar made it possible to train 313,000 persons in proper methods of first aid to the injured; to teach 100,000 others how to rescue people from drowning and how to revive those apparently drowned; to instruct another 50,000 mostly women and girls, in care of the sick, promotion of individual and family health, and sanitation in the home.

That dollar further enabled the Red Cross to furnish assistance to 165,000 veterans or their families in presenting claims before the government in obtaining hospitalization, in readjusting themselves to new conditions and bridging economic difficulties; it made possible similar assistance to 40,000 men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard, or their dependents, and to 116,000 civilian families that were victims of various forms of distress. Won't you add your contribution to a noble cause?

Surprised On Birthday

A surprise party was held Sunday in honor of the birthday of John Kuse which was October 30th. The guests who attended were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grelek and family of Lowell, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Robinson of Dolton; Mrs. Paul Lipps of Riverdale; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Albert and family of Riverdale; Mr. and Mrs. George Bochmann of Harvey; Mr. and Mrs. Otto Lau and family of Green Garden; Mr. and Mrs. Otto Bochmann of Tinley Park; Mr. and Mrs. Hans Besser and family of Harvey; Mr. and Mrs. Herman Heine of Matteson. They all report a wonderful time and wished Mr. Kuse many more happy birthdays.

Mokena Youth Jailed On Halloween Mischief Suspicion Sprung Out of Jail by Buddies

ATTEMPT TO ROB MOKENA OIL CO., CHECK PRINTS

Another attempt was made Thursday noon to rob the Mokena Oil Co., office at Mokena. Fred Rauch had left the office at 12:10 noon. Twenty minutes later his partner, Charles Burkhardt drove in the station yard with an oil truck and saw the office door open. Entrance had been gained by smashing a window with a piece of tile. The drawers of the office desk had been ransacked but no money had been left there over the noon hour. About ten days ago the same place was robbed of $15 hidden in a desk drawer.

A wave of petty crime has been going on in Mokena for the past few months. In order to check this Deputy Sheriff Gilbert Knater and a finger print expert from the office of Sheriff James O'Neill of Will County were called on and came out Thursday night to check up on finger prints at the Mokena Oil Co., office. It is thought all the petty crimes have been committed by local talent and it is high time it was stopped.

Red Cross Drive Opens Nov. 11

The Annual Red Cross Membership Drive will start Saturday November 11th and continue until the last of the month. Many of the Roll Call chairman this year are ministers. In this locality, two of our ministers are serving in this capacity. Rev. Walter Geffert, pastor of the Mokena Immanuel Lutheran Church, in Mokena, and in Frankfort, Rev. George Gerhold, pastor of St. Peter's Evangelical Church.

Truck Load of Paper Burned

A huge Gordon Trucking Company transport truck carrying seven tons of roll paper burst into flames at the intersection of 159th and Wolf road about 3:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon of last week when the paper became hot from combustion and broke out in a blaze. The truck was pulled to the side of the pavement on the 159th street side and the trailer was unhooked from the tractor. The Orland Park Fire Department was summoned and managed to prevent the big tires on the trailer from burning, altho one of the tires did catch fire but the flames were quickly extinguished. The entire load of paper, however, was destroyed representing a loss of $120 covered by insurance. The body of the trailer being metal, only the canvass was destroyed. After the trailer cooled off so it could be handled it was hooked up with the tractor and returned to Chicago about 11 o'clock Thursday night. The shipment of paper was enroute from Chicago to Joliet.

Cherry Tree Blooms

Mokena has had cherry trees in bloom recently. Even though all the leaves were off the tree in the yard of O. Shaefer on First street, yet the tree had quite a number of blossoms on it.

Things popped right and left Halloween night in Mokena. Mayor Harry F. Mall, deputy George Bennett and a special deputy from the sheriff's office in Joliet patrolled the village. They came upon a group of boys throwing eggs at cars and at the home of Principal Gerald Dunn. Mayor Mall seized a young married man on suspicion of being a ring leader of the group. He was jailed and when the officers went to let him out they found that someone had broken open the cell doors and released him. He was found at home but refused to say who let him out.

Copper wire screens at the Mokena school house were cut with knives and report has it that an out-house was placed on the Rock Island tracks but someone discovered it and had it removed before any trains came along.

Screens at the Albert Hentsch home were also reported cut and some frames smashed.

Fire Chief Herman Schweser suffered painful injuries to his hand as a result of tripping over a bucket Halloween pranksters had left on a sidewalk near the A. C. Hall place.

Disabled Car Knocked In Ditch

Sunday night an automobile going south on Kean ave. got a flat tire. The driver turned around and headed north to go to the Brennan Gables at 159th and Kean. He was going about 20 miles an hour when another car struck the disabled car from the rear, ditching it. No one was reported hurt.

Hold Open House

Wednesday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schellhase, Sr., Tinley Park, held open house for their friends in honor of the 70th birthday anniversary of Mr. Schellhase. The latter suffered serious injuries in a fall from a ladder a few weeks ago and is now confined to his home.

May Open Hardware Store

Orville Werner of New Lenox has rented and moved into the building remodeled by George J. Hacker on Front street in Mokena. It is reported that Mr. Werner may open a hardware store after the first of the year.

To Hold Bazaar And Supper

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist church of Mokena will hold their annual supper and bazaar in the basement of St. John's Evangelical church Thursday, November 9th, afternoon and evening. There will be a sale of aprons and fancy work of all kinds beginning at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

Delicious supper will be served beginning at 5 o'clock. An interesting program will be given at 7:45 p. m. Be sure to come and have a good supper and an enjoyable evening.

"BALKANIZATION" FAILS

Red Milk, Green Oleo Have Bad Taste; Trade Walls Bounce Back at States

By EARL COMPTON

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

CHICAGO.—Tearing down "spite fences" to reunite 48 "jealous Balkan kingdoms" into the United States is the job facing federal and state officials.

Heeding a nation-wide protest from farmers, consumers and business men, officials are liquidating a vast system of state trade barriers and cutting miles of legislative red tape, which hems in commerce.

For trade barrier legislation is almost universally recognized as a serious blockade on the road to recovery.

Rhode Island adopted a law requiring that out-of-state milk be colored red; Wisconsin ruled that oleo-margarine must be colored green; California assessed a $500 license fee on imports of "foreign" beer; Georgia empowered her agricultural commissioner to embargo any farm products when Georgia has plenty at home.

They've All Boomeranged.

These are but a few samples of the hundreds of state trade barrier laws that "boost Uncle Sam's food bill by hundreds of millions of dollars annually, lower returns on business investments and throttle the channels for distribution of farm crops," a national survey shows. All were adopted to help local producers—and all have had a boomerang effect.

When California raised a quarantine against Florida's citrus fruit, Florida replied with a virtual embargo against the west coast state. New York excluded Connecticut's ice cream, and Connecticut replied in kind. Indiana and Michigan waged a bitter trade war over beer.

No state has been neutral in the depression-born battle to "protect home industries" against outside competition. Now, however, the trend toward what Gov. Lloyd C. Stark of Missouri calls "Balkanization" seems to have come to a halt, and observers see a growing movement toward lowering the barriers. Latest evidence is a national survey of one of the more widely prevalent types of "barrier" legislation, chain store taxes. Although more than 60 bills aimed at chain stores were introduced in 34 state legislatures this year, "not one new state was added to the anti-chain roster," the survey shows. In three states anti-chain taxes were outlawed by the courts in the last six months and a growing movement for repeal of existing anti-chain store legislation is under way, the study showed.

Of 25 states which have tried these

COLORADO: Militia departs out-of-state seeking work

CALIFORNIA: Motorists go through customs inspection

NEW YORK: State troopers inspect milk trucks taxes, only 20 now have them on the statute books, the survey showed. Opposition by farm, labor and consumer groups was climaxed recently by a resolution adopted by a conference of the Council of State Governments, which said in part:

"Any law that is punitive to any store or other legitimate distributional agency of agricultural products is a harmful trade barrier, detrimental to both the producer and consumer."

The abrupt about-face in the trend of chain store taxes parallels the trend of other discriminatory state laws. Only two states added new barrier laws this year and dozens of similar bills were rejected.

States Establish Customs Barriers.

Among the most harmful of the barrier measures, advocates of free trade among states believe, are those affecting automobiles and trucks. Fifteen states now have official ports of entry, at which arriving drivers are inspected and taxed. Some states impose a duty on gas in the tank, others charge truck drivers from out of state for the use of their highways. Heavy registration fees on "foreign" trucks are assessed by many states, and the operator of a five-ton vehicle bound from Alabama to South Carolina is forced to pay fees totaling $1,100!

Usually the effect of such legislation was to bring about bitter retaliation. For example, Kansas passed an automobile port of entry law in 1933, and set up 66 "ports" on the state borders. The now famous complaint of an Oklahoma farmer tells the result:

"I had been taking my produce to market in Kansas for years," he said. "One day a man in uniform stopped me and told me I must pay a tax of 1½ cents a ton mile. 'My truck weighed five tons and I was going to travel 420 miles in Kansas. So I paid $31.50 to get in the state with my truck for two days. I paid $16 more in gasoline taxes, which brought the total to nearly $50 and completely cancelled all the profits of my trip.'"

The sequel to the Oklahoma farmer's story was that his state soon erected 53 ports of entry of its own!

Truckers, Farmers Suffer.

Farmers share with truckers, the heaviest burden of interstate trade barriers. Quarantines and rigid inspection standards are in force in many states, less in the interests of protecting public health than with the design of protecting local producers. Minnesota passed a law, since invalidated, that all meat sold in the state must be inspected within 24 hours of the time of slaughter, eliminating out of state meat packers. Pennsylvania ruled that all milk sold in the Keystone state must be approved by Pennsylvania inspectors.

With such laws multiplying at a rapid rate, economists and public officials saw that a breakup of free trade was very close to being an accomplished fact. They pointed out that three roads lay ahead:

First, the way toward real Balkanization—isolation of state from state, with roads patrolled by troops and smugglers shuttling back and forth on dark and lonely trails.

Second, the road toward complete federal control of commerce, with state governments forced by a long-suffering, producing and consuming public to give up their rights to United States authorities.

Third, the way toward razing these artificial barriers, toward a realization on the part of every man that what hurts his neighbor, whether across the state line or 2,000 miles away, also hurts him.

This third road is the one selected by the Council of State Governments and co-operating state and federal agencies, which have outlined a definite, long-term program to restore free interstate commerce.

Social Security for Mule

The 300-mile neutral zone . . . War's effect on presidential aspirations . . . Big Lend-Spend program on the fire despite war-boom talk . . . No concrete plan yet advanced.

WASHINGTON.—What's become of that 300-mile neutral zone around the Americas? There are several answers, but Latin-American diplomats do not find them amusing.

Cynically minded observers insist that the whole thing was a beautiful plan to aid Britain and France, under the guise of keeping the war away from the Western hemisphere. The 116 reconconditioned World war destroyers were to patrol this zone, with assistance from other naval vessels, and at once protect inter-American shipping and prevent the war zone from spreading to this side of the Atlantic. It was to be an answer to Germany's reported long-range submarines, to her mysterious tankers which could supply undersea boats in the South Atlantic or Pacific, and an assurance that at least part of the long trail over which supplies from the Americas to Britain and France would have to pass would be safe.

But apparently the notion was born without benefit of British and French consultation. They paid no attention to it, apparently, until the Latins, reluctantly dragged into session away in advance of the date they thought necessary, formally adopted the neutrality-zone idea on the urgent pleas of Sumner Welles, under secretary of state.

Then, and not till then, they spoke. They didn't like it. How could the thing be adjusted to permit free military access by the Allies to their own possessions in the Americas. Particularly to Jamaica, British and French Guiana, British Honduras, Martinique, etc.?

This Country Is Neutral And Would Stay That Way

Well, it seemed like a good idea at the time, but after all this country is neutral. The other members of the Pan American Union are all neutral, and certainly we don't want to do anything to get ourselves embroiled: Of course the cynics in the Latin diplomatic corps have more to say, unofficially. They wonder why it was that this was a good idea so long as it seemed aimed only at Germany, but has virtually been forgotten since Britain and France expressed doubts as to its workability.

If you will dig back into the debates on the Versailles treaty in the United States senate, and particularly the discussions of the League of Nations covenant, it may throw some interesting light on what is going on in Washington now. Especially if you remember that Franklin D. Roosevelt, as a candidate for vice president in 1920, approved the policy of Woodrow Wilson wholeheartedly.

Wilson had said that Article X, of the league covenant, was the "heart" of the covenant. This is the article which provided that the members of the League of Nations should use force to prevent aggressions by one nation on another. This article has never been observed, even by the nations which did join the league. It was never even seriously proposed in the league assembly at Geneva, though there were two notable occasions when member nations were attacked, notably China and Ethiopia.

Big Movement On for New Lending and Spending Bill

Despite all the war-boom talk there is a tremendous under-the-surface movement in Washington for a big new lending and spending bill. A considerable group of New Dealers is pushing it quietly, but determinedly. Apparently they are not discouraged by the bad beating the lend-spend idea took in the last session of congress, when that $3,000,000,000 program for public works, express highways, rural electrification and whatnot was thrown in the ashbin by a combination of conservative Democrats and Republicans.

Industry, the New Dealers are saying, is still lagging because not enough of the nation's savings go into investment to lift its purchasing power and keep production equipment in full operation.

The war boom, say the New Dealers, is just a palliative. Advocates of the lend-spend theory insist that if private industry can't absorb all our savings, the government must take a hand—must divert savings into productive investment by measures more far-reaching than any which have been taken to date. A few of the more cautious fear that if the government starts speeding up and manipulating the flow of investment funds, private capital may get another case of jitters and lay down absolutely. These fraud cats say that it would scarcely be possible for the government to take up the slack if it threw that sort of paralyzing scare into private capitalists.

But there have always been a few cautious folks hanging round the borders of the New Deal, and it is not of record that they managed to do much besides utter gloomy forebodings. Usually the left wingers have won out before the battle became too gory. And generally there were a few political casualties on the timid side. "Not reprisals," you understand, "just increased efficiency through personnel changes."

Spend-Lend Enthusiasts Are Perfectly Sincere Theorists

So far there is no concrete plan. As a matter of fact most of the spend-lend enthusiasts are perfectly sincere theorists—they are not trying to win adoption of their plan because they want to include some pet projects. This makes them all the more effective because they can always win a lot of strength by parceling out fat projects, thus winning support for the whole scheme from people who have no sympathy whatever with the main idea.

However, one of the notions being advocated by influential members of the spend-lend group proposes the setting up of a new government department for the purpose of investing in industry. At the beginning, the idea would be to confine this investment of government funds to the railroads and utilities. Drastic rules governing this investment would be written into the law.

One of these, which is arousing considerable interest, is that there must be a complete reorganization of the privately owned railroad or electric company accepting government funds. New stock, based on a valuation of the property, would be issued for all outstanding securities. More stock would be issued to cover new expenditures, the government taking all the investment bankers do not sell to the public.

European War's Effect on Presidential Aspirations

The late John J. Mahon, for many years Democratic organization boss of Baltimore, used to observe that "24 hours is a lifetime in politics." Numerous presidential aspirants are learning that there is a whole lot of truth in that statement.

Last spring, for instance, Thomas E. Dewey was far and away ahead of all other Republican aspirants, if one believes the polls. But Hitler's invasion of Poland changed that far more effectively than the Frank Murphy "overshadowing" operations so elaborately planned by the administration.

Now consider the immediate beneficiary, Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg. The Michigan senator has virtually staked his chances on a set of time elements over none of which he has the slightest control. He has become the leader of the "peace bloc," the spearhead of the fight to prevent repeal of the arms embargo.

But suppose, as Senator Vandenberg many people still believe will happen, that eventually the United States gets into the war, on the side of Britain and France. Is it not possible that the reaction will be decidedly unfavorable to Vandenberg for some time thereafter? Is it not even possible that many will think, had no such fight been made as Vandenberg is making, that Hitler might have seen the handwriting on the wall and thus made unnecessary the sending of American boys to France?

Far-fetched? Yes, but no more strange than many political reactions which followed the last World War.

Pro-Embargo Senators Base Hope on Action of House

Then again, suppose Vandenberg wins his fight. It is not likely that he could win in the senate. It seems inevitable, as this is written, that when the roll call is reached a substantial majority of the senate will vote to repeal the embargo against shipping "arms, ammunition and implements of war" to belligerents. But there are wild rumors of what the house might do. In fact pro-embargo senators, from Vandenberg down, privately admit their real hope is that the public opinion they are expecting to arouse by their speeches in the senate will have its real effect on the house.

So suppose Vandenberg wins, in the house, and then that next spring and summer the war seems to be going very badly for Britain and France. What will be the public reaction? Is it not human to expect that those of the American voters who sympathize with Britain and France, little as they may want their husbands and sons and brothers to get in the firing line, will hold resentment against the men who deprived Britain and France of an arms supply?

But there are other time elements. From the very first day of the war everyone expected Hitler to launch fearful air attacks on France and Britain, especially Britain. For reasons which the international experts have explained at length, he has delayed. But every day he has delayed has been of advantage to Britain and France so far as getting ready is concerned. It has increased their inadequate supply of guns and ammunition; it has permitted their arms factories and explosives works to run 24 hours a day.

Doc's Note Came Easy To Chemist—With Cash

An invitation to dinner had been sent to the new doctor. In reply the hostess received an absolutely illegible letter.

"I must know if he accepts or declines," she declared. "If I were you," suggested her husband, "I should take it to the druggist. They can always read doctors' letters."

The druggist looked at the sheet of notepaper which she had handed him, and without waiting for her explanation went into his dispensary, and returned a few minutes later with a bottle which he handed over the counter.

"There you are, madam," he said. "That will be $1.50, please."

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood. You may suffer nagging backache, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

DOAN'S PILLS

Uncle Sam's Three Musketeers

BULLITT BIDDLE, AND KENNEDY

None of them have to work, being independently wealthy, but Uncle Sam's three European trouble shooters get a kick out of it. Bullitt taught the Russian army to play polo; Biddle proved a diplomat can work in a sweatshirt; Joe Kennedy may be worth $35,000,000, but he only grins and says: "What the heck, all I seem able to do is keep up nine children and four houses."

WASHINGTON.—It was Anthony J. Drexel Biddle Jr. who 'phoned from Warsaw to tell William C. Bullitt in Paris that Adolf Hitler had invaded Poland. It was Bullitt who 'phoned the President in Washington at 2:30 a. m. Two nights later it was Joseph P. Kennedy who ended his cryptic message on the Athenia explosion: ". . . all survivors who escaped the explosion have been picked up. Thank God."

It was Biddle's luck to have all the adventure. A less versatile diplomat might have fallen down on the Polish assignment. He fled Warsaw with his wife, heard the Berlin radio give his new address and trekked to the Rumanian border where the Biddles lived in a primitive shack while watching troop movements and helping evacuate Americans. Finally he shuffled off to Paris.

Biddle was born wealthy, but he's not the drawing room variety. From school he joined the army and led Negro troops, which accounts for his popularity among Philadelphia Negroes. Later he did odd jobs, finally winning the French amateur tennis championship. He's a jiu jitsu expert and has worked without pay for J. Edgar Hoover's FBI. In 1937, when he left his Norway diplomatic post, the city's taxicab men sent a delegation to say goodbye.

Bullitt's knowledge of European affairs is a thing of wonder and a boon to the state department. He's spent 25 years collecting it, starting as a newspaper man. He went to Versailles with Wilson, which began his diplomatic interest. He early recommended American recognition of Russia. In 1938 he was named ambassador there, losing favor only when he protested Dictator Stalin's propagandizing.

Joe Kennedy is at once the least colorful and most colorful of this trio. London is his first diplomatic assignment, so he's not a career man. He's tried about 20 different enterprises, all of them successful. He's built ships, been a banker, a movie magnate and a corporation counsel, but he's never taken such keen interest in any job as the St. James ambassadorship. And Londoners think he's swell.

Both Bullitt and Biddle are men of the world, talk several languages and dress like Beau Brummels. But they're not the tea-drinking sort. Bullitt's two years fishing on an island in the Bosphorus were the happiest of his life. Biddle's been a shipping clerk, a bank clerk, a real estate salesman and an athlete. Kennedy, who's a little less concerned with being a man of the world than either of his brother diplomats, is nevertheless no serious-minded desk worker. His grin and cussing are famous. And last year he flattered Queen Elizabeth immensely by uttering an unheard-of remark. He told her she was a "cute trick."

Prologue to Love

THE STORY THUS FAR

Lovely, independent Autumn Dean, returning home to British Columbia from abroad without her father's knowledge, stops at the home of Hector Cardigan, an old family friend. He tells her that she should not have come home, that things have changed. Arriving home at the "Castle of the Norns," she is greeted lovingly by her father, Jarvis Dean, who gives her to understand that she is welcome—for a short visit. Her mother, former belle named Millicent Odell, has been dead for years. Autumn cannot understand her father's attitude, though gives him to understand that she is home for good. She has grown tired of life in England, where she lived with an aunt. Her father gives a welcoming dance at the castle. Autumn meets Florian Parr, dashing, well-educated young man of the countryside. Late in the evening Autumn leaves the dance, rides horseback to the neighboring ranch where she meets Bruce Lander, friend and champion of her childhood days. He takes her to see his mother, an invalid. His father is dead, thought to have killed himself. As soon as his mother sees Autumn she commands Bruce to take her away, that death follows in the wake of the Odells. Autumn is both saddened and perplexed by the invalid's tirade. Bruce, apologetic, can offer no reason for his mother's attitude. Autumn calls again on Hector Cardigan—this time to find out the reason for Mrs. Lander's outburst. From his conversation she inferred that Geoffrey Lander killed himself because he loved Millicent Dean, her mother.

There was no mistaking Hector's meaning. He would say no more about it at present. On the other hand, his very manner was in itself a confession. Autumn's question had been answered. She had no desire to leave her old friend in an unpleasant frame of mind. She looked up at him and laughed.

"Hector, you old goose," she said, "I believe you are almost angry. After all, there isn't much that either of us can do about it now. Come along, darling, and show me your flowers."

In Hector's orderly garden at the rear of the cottage, blue flags stood tall and brave, cupping the sunlight. Autumn stared at them and tried desperately to check the shaking uncertainty of her own heart; it was in Bruce Lander's eyes that she had seen that same clean and gallant blue.

The moods which had attended Bruce Lander all day had been of two disconcerting extremes. In one moment he would be swept up to heights of emotion as he thought of how Autumn Dean looked at him on their meeting last night, the quick, shy veiling of those luminous gray-green eyes of hers, a concealment that had brought a strange throb to his blood. In the next moment he would be in the depths, remembering how she had been sent away.

When Autumn had gone, he had done his best to soothe his mother and dissipate the fears that had beset her wandering mind. When he had finally succeeded in getting her to sleep, he had sat beside her for a long time, reluctant to call the nurse from her room.

All his life, it seemed, Bruce Lander had been compelled to adjust himself in one way or another to his mother's humors. He had scarcely known a day at home that had not been marred by her variable temper that often flared up over the merest trifle. It had begun when he was eight—twenty years ago now—and very soon he had grown, in his pathetic boyish way, to understand that his mother's sudden outbursts were her only means of preserving her sanity after what had happened to his father, that dashing figure romantically and tragically limned in memory. She must have loved Geoffrey Lander with a singular and rather awful intensity, and Bruce could imagine the dreadful scene in the birch-hung gully recurring to her with cruel suddenness in the midst of some familiar task. He could imagine her lifting her eyes from her sewing or from her work among her flower-beds, and beholding again the stark virtue of Geoffrey Lander lying face downward in the shallow, amber-clear creek, his head lying downstream and the white stones under the water there becoming red as sullen garnets. Out of his own young heart-break had grown a great pity and patience for her.

In all those twenty years, Bruce had never heard his mother speak the name of Millicent Odell until she had spoken it last night. His memory of his father was on the whole very vague. But he could recall one afternoon in summer—it had remained with him like a vivid dream—when they had ridden together down the birch-filled gully where they had gathered pocketfuls of rounded pebbles from the creek and Bruce had used them in the sling-shot his father had made for him. He did not know how he had come to think of his father and Millicent Dean as friends, but somewhere in that dimly recollected past he had seen them riding together down some forgotten trail and his boyish fancy had clung to the picture so that he had rarely been able to think of them apart. He remembered, too, the day when Jarvis Dean's wife had died. He had forgotten the words "his mother" had spoken that day, but the bitter spirit in which she had spoken them had lingered with his curiosity concerning the relationship of the two women.

And now, after nearly twenty years, Jane Lander had once more spoken the name of Millicent Odell, with a bitterness and hatred that time itself had failed to vanquish. Of late, he knew, there had been something almost fanatical in the proud manner in which his mother had spurned Jarvis Dean, but Bruce had found some excuse for that in the haughty arrogance of the old Laird himself, who for years had lived almost as a recluse in his formidable turreted house. Jarvis Dean's manner to the world in general had been hostile, people said, ever since the death of his beautiful wife. If Bruce was perplexed at the Laird's stony refusal to acknowledge him even as a neighbor, there was at least some consolation in the fact that the dour sheepman treated everyone alike, granting each a sort of individual eclipse with the extraordinary power of his unseeing eye.

It was mid-afternoon, the light falling moist and sweet from the green of the hills into the curved valley where the Lander ranch seemed to hide in humility from its more magnificent neighbor, the domain of Jarvis Dean. The ancient weeping-willow trees drooped like a ceaseless lovely rain into their own dark and earthy shadow, and like a phalanx of green-tipped paint brushes the long avenue of Lombardy poplars stroked the sky, swaying in a whispered rhythm from the corrals to the Lander ranch house. In the tiny patch of sunlight that lay like a gilded shield between the house and the somber poplars, Jane Lander's irises bloomed, purple, yellow, and then again purple, on each satin lip a brilliant sunny stain. Jane Lander's hands would probably never trim those beds again, Bruce thought as he strode down the walk leading from the house to the corrals. The voices of the ranch hands, the bleat of sheep, the occasional barking of a dog, were rarefied to unreality through the blue filament of the air.

From the woolshed came the whirr-r-r of the shearing machine. Two or three hundred sheep stood in the corral outside, a ranch hand running them into the shed as quickly as the signal came from within. These were the pick of Bruce's flock of more than three thousand; they were great three-year-old Merinos, their bodies richly wattled.

He went into the shearing pen, where the great tall hemp sacks were rapidly filling with wool. As the nervous sheep passed from the hands of the shearer, they were being caught by the brander, who gave each a smear from the branding brush. Bruce stood by and laughed at the ungainly look of a great-horned ram as, shorn of his magnificent coat and duly branded, he dashed to freedom.

When he had inspected the work and instructed his men, Bruce went out and made his way to the small pasture back of the poplars, where he whistled to his horse. When he had saddled him he mounted and rode off to the southward to visit one of his camps. He found the camp deserted. The flock, he knew, was grazing to the eastward, close to the edge of the Dean property. He caught sight of the sheep edging their way across the face of a hill. The herder was bringing them back to camp for the night.

Bruce rode out and circled to the rear of the flock, where he found his herder at work with his dog, bringing up the stragglers and keeping the sheep on the move toward camp.

"We'll be ready for your bunch tomorrow, Ned," he told the man. "Right, sir! I'll start 'em in first thing."

Bruce ran his eye over the flock. "You've seen nothing more of that big coyote hanging around?"

"I'm thinkin' ye'll see little o' that one from now on," said the herder. "Them two shots I got at him day before yesterday come close to puttin' him away for keeps. But, since ye're askin', I did hear something this afternoon over on the Dean place. Seemed like it was down there somewhere near the Gulch—or beyond."

"You heard something?" Bruce asked.

"It sounded like one o' them cats we get up in the hills sometimes—like a young-one cryin', it was."

"Did you go down to see what it was?"

"I went as far as the Dean place, but I could hear nothin'. I heard it once or twice after then an' I could 'a' sworn it was a kid cryin'."

"When did you hear it last?"

"Mebbe an hour back—after I started headin' for home. I thought I'd come out in the evenin', just to make sure."

Bruce turned his horse about and looked eastward beyond the line that separated his own land from that of Jarvis Dean.

"Perhaps I'd better ride down that way," he said, then bethought himself. When he had been very much younger, he had heard the men talk among themselves of the haunted gully known as Lander's Gulch. His herder had doubtless been loath to venture too far that way alone. "You're sure you heard a cry of some sort, Ned?" Bruce asked him.

"Oh, indeed I did, sir. As I say—like a young-one cryin', it was."

"I'll go down and take a look," said Bruce and rode away.

At the entrance to the ravine, Bruce swung his long body out of the saddle and walked slowly into the birches, letting his horse wander off to nibble the sweet young grass. On a little rise of ground he stood and listened. The shimmering air held a sad stillness; even the coquettish young leaves of the birches drooped in a melancholy quietude.

He had been standing there only a moment when from somewhere deep within the birches came the tiny bleat of a lamb. Bruce knew it could not be one of its own flock. Ned was too experienced a herder to permit any of his wards to stray. Besides, the sound had come from well within the land of Jarvis Dean. The responsibility was not his and yet—he stepped down from the rise of ground and strode through the birches till he came to the creek. He followed the shallow stream downward until he came at last to the fatal spot which he had marked years ago and which he had visited occasionally during the summers that had come and gone since his boyhood—the spot where the sheepherder had found the still form of Geoffrey Lander lying in the shallow creek.

He paused a moment and looked about him. The light of the waning afternoon was a pure amber sprayed with lacy leaf-shadows. Here it was, and on such a day as this, that Geoffrey Lander had last looked upon the world he had loved.

"I hope you will try to forget what happened last night."

He lifted his eyes suddenly at the sound of a child's whimper. Only a few yards away, half-hidden behind the shining birches, a small boy was leading a lamb at the end of a rope. At first he could not believe his eyes. But when he called and the boy turned his face toward him and began to cry, Bruce knew him at once. It was the young son of Tom Willmar, Jarvis Dean's foreman. In a moment he had the boy in his arms.

"Why, Simmy? Where did you come from?" he asked. Simmy buried his face on Bruce's shoulder and sobbed. The lamb promptly lay down in the fern that grew beside the water.

Bruce laughed as he hugged the boy close. "Where in the world do you think you're going, Simmy?" he asked.

"I want to go home," Simmy sobbed. "I want to go home."

"Sure you do. Come along, son, and I'll take you home," Bruce comforted him.

He caught up the lamb under one arm, and carrying the boy on the other, made his way quickly out of the birches and whistled to his horse. Almost at the same instant he heard a woman's voice call from the hilltop to the northward and looking up he saw Autumn Dean riding toward him. He hailed her and waited until she had come down to him and had dismounted beside him.

"Where did you find him?" she asked Bruce.

"Down there in the gully. He looked as if he was getting ready to put up for the night."

"Simmy, you little imp!" Autumn said, stretching her arms out for him. "Come to me, darling."

Bruce surrendered his charge and stood by, the lamb still in his arms, while Autumn wiped the boy's eyes and cheeks with her handkerchief and kissed him to still his crying.

"Don't cry, darling. Autumn will take you back home." She looked at Bruce. "Could anything be sillier?"

she said and laughed. "That's Mo-mo you have in your arms. The men told Simmy that they were going to dock Mo-mo's tail this afternoon and Simmy just wouldn't stand for it. He ran off to hide Mo-mo in the hills. He must have been gone for hours before anyone missed him."

"How did you know where to look for him?" Bruce asked.

"We have young Dickie to thank for that. After all hands had made a frantic search about the place, Dickie confessed he had seen Simmy go away in this direction and I rode out at once. The men are scouring the hills. I had no idea he would have come so far."

"It was sheer luck on my part," Bruce told her. "One of my men was over this way and told me he thought he had heard a child crying. I took a run over and—"

"Simmy, you little idiot!" Autumn scolded the boy. "We might never have found you. If it hadn't been for Bruce—"

She cuddled the youngster and smiled over her shoulder at Bruce who stood watching her.

"Send the reward to Ned, my herder," he said.

She set the boy on his feet and drew a sigh of relief as she looked down where the birches stood along the creek. Abruptly and disquietingly out of the obscure weave of the past, a pattern, a color, stood out vividly before her. This was the gully she had visited years ago against her father's desires.

"I used to come down here often," she said.

"I still do—sometimes," Bruce replied slowly.

She was sorry then that she had spoken. A wistfulness had come into Bruce's eyes that caused her to turn away.

"Come along, Simmy," she said quickly. "We've got to get you back home."

"I'll go along with you," Bruce suggested. "You won't be able to manage alone."

"Thanks, Bruce," she said, and got into her saddle at once.

When he had seated the boy before her, he lifted the lamb and mounted his horse, and in a moment they were riding slowly up the hillside on the way to the trail that led back to the Dean ranch-house.

"I hope you will try to forget what happened last night, Autumn," Bruce said when they had gone a little way in silence.

Autumn turned to him and smiled reassuringly. "One doesn't try to forget such things, Bruce," she replied. "One tries to understand them."

"That's better, of course," he said. "I am sorry it happened."

"It couldn't be helped. It was I who insisted on going down. Besides—I think I'm glad rather than sorry."

"I can't quite see that," Bruce protested.

Autumn was silent for a moment before she replied. Finally she turned and looked squarely into his eyes. "You and I, Bruce, have grown up together—without knowing much about ourselves. I lay awake last night wondering why your mother should have hated mine for twenty years or more. I think I have learned the reason. I spent an hour today with Hector Cardigan."

"Hector?"

"Yes. Has it ever occurred to you that your mother's bitterness comes of—"

She hesitated and Bruce spoke up. "Of jealousy?"

"Do you think it possible that the two—your father and my mother—may have been in love with each other?"

Bruce's eyes were straight before him as he replied, "I have never thought of either of them—without the other."

There seemed to be nothing to be said after that. They rode forward together, aware of a deep and silent understanding that was more than words. Once Autumn permitted her eyes to move quickly over his strong brown hands and along his arms to the powerful curves of his shoulders. And once he turned and saw that her rippling hair had come loose from its knot at the nape of her neck and had fallen deliciously about her rose-blown cheeks. Her hair must be a sort of Auburn, he thought, but in the low sun it had tints of plum color. He found himself thinking that she had deep-sea eyes—mermaid's eyes, luminous gray-green. He wanted to tell her so, but forebore.

And just then a rider came racing toward them across the range. It was one of Jarvis Dean's men who had been searching for the lost Simmy.

CHAPTER IV

In his somber-toned study Jarvis Dean sat smoking his cigar. On a small, low table beside his chair a large book lay open, face downward, at the page where he had left off his reading nearly two hours ago. It was now five o'clock and the Sunday afternoon sunshine lay in long slanting beams across the dark green rug that covered the floor. He must have dozed off, he thought, as the clock on the mantel chimed the hour. He had no idea it was so late. Dinner would be on before he knew it. It was odd that Autumn had not yet come back. Florian Parr had come up from Kelowna for the day and the girl had gone motoring with him. They would be in any moment now, surely, drinking their abominable cocktails and shattering the Sunday quiet with their inconsequential chatter.

Well, the younger generation had come to claim its own. It was only natural, after all, he supposed. But the coming had irritated him. He had never given much thought to the younger generation until Autumn had returned unannounced and taken possession of the gloomy old house with no other thought, apparently, than that the place was hers. It was surprising, too, how immediate and complete the possession had been.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for November 5

RIGHTEOUSNESS IN THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:17-20, 38-45; 6:1-4.
GOLDEN TEXT—Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.—Matthew 5:48.

"Righteousness in the Kingdom," the title of our lesson, properly relates its teaching to the kingdom of the Messiah which is to come on the earth, and to the condition which shall then prevail. At the same time we agree with Dr. James M. Gray that "it would be wrong to press this too far and to say that the Sermon on the Mount has no application whatever to the Christian church or the time in which we live, for God is the same through all dispensations and the underlying principles of His government never change."

Certainly it is true that if all of the men and all of the nations of the earth were on this Armistice Sunday true followers of Christ and ready to carry out the teachings of this lesson, there would no longer be any possibility of war. This means that the best peace propaganda is the sending of missionaries and teachers to all the earth to win men to Christ.

Our lesson should be studied and taught with great care lest we confuse morality with Christianity and make it appear that men are justified before God by their good works rather than by their faith in Christ.

I. Christ Fulfills the Law (5:17-20)

The law of God is eternal, never to be abrogated, never set aside. Christ Himself, although we might properly say that He was in reality the Law-giver and thus had power and authority over the law, indicated His purpose in coming to be that of giving the law its full meaning, not of destroying it. One could wish that those who profess to be His servants might have the same measure of regard for God's law. If they did, they obviously would not be so ready to ignore it, so quick to change it or explain it away, and far more ready to accept with their Master every "jot and tittle," that is, even the minutest detail of His Word.

Recognizing Christ as the fulfillment of the law should prepare one to manifest obedience to every moral precept through His grace and by His strength. Certainly it should not lead anyone to lawlessness or carelessness regarding details of the daily walk. Fellowship with the Saviour should be revealed in consistent living (v. 20).

II. Christ Explains the Law (5:38-45)

Look at verses 21 to 37. The spirit of murder is anger (vv. 21, 22). A lustful look is adultery (vv. 27-30), and it is better to be blind than to be guilty of it. Divorce is linked very plainly with adultery (vv. 31, 32). Swearing is forbidden (vv. 33-37). Thus Christ strips outward conformity to the law of its apparent virtue and reveals that with God it is the spirit that gives meaning to the act.

He goes on to make plain that God alone is wise enough to take vengeance, that we ought never to retaliate with evil for evil. Note that verse 39 probably refers to an insult rather than to physical violence; that in verse 40 it is a question of a difference of opinion in which the other man feels that he has a legal right to your coat; and that here, as in verses 41 and 42, it is not a matter of letting a wicked or scheming person defraud you of your rights or property, but rather of doing what is required of you in an ungrudging spirit and of being generous with others who are in need. In Christ we are to be like our heavenly Father and love our enemies (vv. 43-45).

III. Christ Illustrates the Law (6:1-4)

Possibly it would be more appropriate for us to say that Christ here illustrates the right and the wrong way of fulfilling the law. How very clear He makes it that the one who, while ostensibly doing the will of God, actually is seeking the recognition and glory of men has received his full reward, for men have applauded his act of generosity. The transaction is complete and God has nothing to do with it at all. On the other hand, the one who gives in the spirit of Christ, not wanting men to know of his faithful stewardship (v. 4), and in fact making no reckoning of it himself (v. 3), may be certain that he has a heavenly Father who takes careful account of the loving deeds of His children and who will reward him, both in this world and in the world to come.

Memories of Happy Days

Why is it that the memory of some days in the past, unmarked by any striking event, always come to us like the breath of spring? It may be that on those days, in reward for some forgotten act, God drew us close to Him, and that we absorbed something of His eternal peace and happiness.

Patterns Practical As Well as Smart

No. 1840. Do you take a large size? Then the beautifully long-line dress (1840) is one that you should make up right away. With slenderizing panels, it has the high-bosomed, narrow-hipped effect most becoming to you. It's smart for afternoon wear and every day, too. Make it of wool broadcloth, wool crepe or faille, with the vestee in contrast, or choose crepe-satin, using the crepe side for the dress and the satin for the vestee—a new and smart combination.

With Slight Military Air.

No. 1839. For juniors, the basque-waisted frock with flaring skirt (1839) is ideal to wear to school and to business. The little-boy collar enables you to keep it always fresh and new-looking, and it's such an easy style to make. This tailors beautifully in wool plaid, challis, velveteen or wool crepe.

The Patterns.

No. 1840 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material with long sleeves; 4¾ yards with short; ¾ yard for vestee.

No. 1839 is designed for sizes 11, 13, 15, 17 and 19. Size 13 requires 2½ yards of 54-inch material with long sleeves; 2¾ yards with short; ¾ yard for collar in contrast.

Records Show Chilly Weather For Six Months in Half of U. S.

This map, prepared from weather bureau records, shows how chilly temperatures encroach upon the United States from Canada as early as September, travel across the continent to Maine, and then sweep southward at a speed of approximately 125 miles a week. When the winter "deadline" falls at or below your region, it's time to put up storm sash, clean the heating unit, check the coal supply, put anti-freeze in the car radiator and shake the moths out of your overcoat.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—This is the first day of winter somewhere, despite what your calendar says. And the long cold spell is traveling toward you at the speed of 125 miles a week.

The calendar says it's winter from December 21 to March 21, but the season when it is necessary to heat the house for comfort extends through half the year in more than half the area of the United States, according to records of the Weather Bureau.

"Storm-sash weather" enters this country in the Rocky Mountain region in October and travels eastward via the northern route across Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota and Upper Michigan to invade the New England states. Then it sweeps southward at approximately 125 miles a week until December. In many sections the home fires must be kept burning until June.

Cold waves cost Americans hundreds of millions of dollars for warm clothing, fuel, snow removal, anti-freeze solutions and other items which would not be needed if "something could be done about" the weather. The only one among these winter expense items that can be reduced appreciably by planning ahead, according to heating experts, is the fuel bill.

Experiments conducted by heating and ventilating engineers at the University of Illinois and University of Wisconsin demonstrated that the cost of heating a residence can be reduced 20 to 30 per cent through "window conditioning," which means any modern form of double glazing, either storm sash or pre-fit double windows. Reports of consumers in a national survey showed fuel savings ranging from $15 to $75 per year with this type of home insulation.

Weather investigators who study tree rings and sun spots to learn about the coming winter's prospects claim that the end of a 90-year "warm" cycle has been reached and that "old fashioned" winters are due for a comeback.

gala affair turned into a Halloween Party, all coming in costume. There was a little old lady, a little boy and girl a sporty gentleman, a Jap, a hula hula girl, a Liza black and a Jane white, all on one young lady. The hostess as a young lady in the gay 90's. Bunco was played and all went home with a prize, refreshments and favors consisted of all in honor of Halloween. For a whole year we will now be our natural selves again.

Monday after school the R.N.A. Juveniles held their Halloween party in Rice's basement. There were sixteen juveniles present games, favors and cats took up the whole afternoon and all went home tired but happy.

Mrs. Walter Mancke entertained the Smiling thru bunco Thursday afternoon.

There are 12 R.N.A. members contemplating motoring to Harvey Friday night to participate in their charter and past oracle meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Reese have now passed their 25th mile stone of married life. We wish them 25 more.

Communism Only Winner of World War

Involvement in another world war might result in a "blackout" of Christianity in the United States, Dr. Walter A. Maier of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, warned today in a coast-to-coast radio address inaugurating the seventh series of Lutheran Hour broadcasts. "Peace through Christ" was his topic.

Urging the continued neutrality of the United States, the Lutheran theologian asserted Communism, with all its anti-Christian implications, would be the only winner. He pointed out that Russia once had a Lutheran Church with 4,000,000 members, but that the Red revolution slaughtered hundreds of the clergy and destroyed the church as an active institution.

"The consequences of our participation in another world war would be terrifying to the churches of America," Dr. Maier added. "They would be thrown into greater financial difficulties than those which, because of the last war, retarded the spread of missions and Christian education. Christian homes would be disrupted by the loss of sons on European battlefields. American youth—Christian youth—would be demoralized through the collapse of morality and the unemployment that would naturally follow a great war."

Following his broadcast to the nation, Dr. Maier addressed a mass meeting of nearly 20,000 at a rally sponsored by the Lutheran organizations of the Cleveland district.

Mrs. Herbert Kohlhaugen

—O—

Mrs. Clarence Heisner of Mokena, but very well known here, underwent a major operation in Silver Cross Hospital on October 25.

Miss Kathryn Heisner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Heisner underwent a major operation in Silver Cross Hospital on October 25.

Mrs. Edith Lambrecht returned to her home after spending the last three weeks with her sister, Mrs. Lulu Whitcomb's home in Matteson. Mrs. Whitcomb came home on Sat. October 28 from St. James Hospital, Chicago Heights where she underwent a serious operation. Nevertheless she is convalescing very satisfactorily.

The Will County Rural Teacher's Association enjoyed a banquet on October 26 in the Universal Church in Joliet. Miss Rosella Breuer was the guest speaker. Those present from our community were: Miss Edith Wischover, Miss Isabelle Harmoning, Mrs. J. C. Knight and Mrs. Harry Marti.

Mrs. Raymond Bettenhausen, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Bettenhausen was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Berg of Joliet. The wedding took place on Sunday, October 22 at 7 o'clock by Rev. Cooper in his church. The young couple are making their home in Joliet.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Genens, Sr. and daughter Miss Freda have moved from the Fox home, where they lived for the past twenty years into the Charles Elsner home. The Fox home was bought by Mrs. Anna Carlson and she moved in to it on October 31.

On Tuesday, October 24, Mrs. William Wischover, Mrs. Walter Pfaff, Mrs. Henry Briedert, Mrs. Alfred Zechlin, Rev. and Mrs. Gerhold and daughter Hilda and Mrs. Herbert Kohlhaugen attended the Monee Women's Federation Convention in Grant Park. An address "Christ and the World Community at Home" by Mrs. C. E. Paulus of Chicago and a talk about Bensenville by Rev. A. Munsterman were the main features of this convention, and they were indeed interesting and inspiring.

Mr. and Mrs. Burnet Schram were pleasantly surprised on October 23 by thirty relatives and friends. The occasion was their first wedding anniversary. Pinochle was played at five tables. Prizes were awarded to Donald Barton, Mrs. Harold Zatteau, Mrs. Margaret Schram and Joseph Hartong. The traveling prize was given to Mrs. Harold Zatteau. At 11 o'clock a two course luncheon was served. Connected with this event the nineteenth birthday of Ralph Nieland, brother of Mrs. Schram was celebrated.

The Frankfort grade and high school girls basketball teams played Monee on October 25 in the new gymnasium. The Monee grade school won by a score of 20 to 3 and the high school boys of Monee were defeated by Frankfort. The girls of Monee defeated the girls from here by a score 8 to 7.

The Frankfort Heavy and Lights Basketball teams will have their first game in the gymnasium of Public School on Sunday, November 5 at 2 o'clock. They will play the Homewood teams.

Three boys, two from New York and one from Pennsylvania caused much excitement here on Saturday night. They entered the car of Lloyd Bettenhausen and were put out. They tried to get in the car of Fred Heusner but were frightened away. Next they started a bonfire in the lumber shed of the Frankfort Grain Elevator. Mr. Christiansen saw them and notified his uncle Henry Lühring, who is manager of the company. He with help had the boys taken to Joliet to be locked up. Peter McCarthy is going to send them back to their homes in the east.

Mrs. Christiana Sangmeister is ill in her home.

Mrs. G. Grasmeyer spent a few days with her sister Mrs. Herman Lewes.

The Mardi Gras celebration which was held on Friday and Saturday of last week proved to be successful as to its social value. There were visitors here from all the surrounding towns. Everyone was decorated with the souvenirs which were sold there. These were hand made and met the approval of all. There were amusements of all kind and many interesting and artistic booths on display. On Saturday night a parade consisting of the band, boy scouts, firemen and maskers marched the streets. Mrs. John Topp was the lucky one to win the quilt. Although the affair took much labor everyone enjoyed their portion of it.

ORLAND PARK

The past week has been one of Halloween parties. On Monday night an open house Halloween Party was held at the Swedish Coffee Shop on 143rd street. The rooms were prettily decorated in yellow and black streamers, lanterns, etc. The usual round of Halloween games were played and odds of candy, apples, pop corn and pop was served. Dancing then formed the chief diversion of the evening. Over thirty guests were present.

The guests were, masked and attired in various costumes and prizes were awarded to the following:

Eleanor Knox, Gerald Cannon, Sonny Daniels, LeRoy Yates, Ann

Eberling, Lois Strong, Betty Lou Marshall, Vera Zerbs and Mabel Egberg.

The party was held under the supervision of Mrs. Egberg. Mr. Egberg also, joined in the festivities and was privileged to dance with the fair ladies. All enjoyed a most delightful time and the guests did not leave for home until the small hours of the morning.

Miss Violet Jacobson, in charge of the Royal Neighbor Juveniles entertained the group at a Halloween Party in the Creer Hall Monday night. Games were played and the usual Halloween party fun enjoyed.

A large group of the young folks hold a Halloween party Tuesday night in the Creer Hall. Following games and dancing, refreshments were served.

Word has been received that the daughter of Dr. Koehler of Springfield well known to Orland people, was killed in an auto accident in Chicago the past week.

Mrs. Charles Hahenlein who was quite badly hurt in an auto accident in Blue Island a week ago, was brought home Sunday and is convalescing quite nicely. Mr. Hahenlein who was also injured in the same accident is also getting along quite nicely. Mrs. Hahenlein sustained a broken collar bone and several broken ribs.

Two attempts were made to enter the home of Charles Dgctor supervisor of Orland township the past week, but were unsuccessful. The would be burglars had a car parked some distance from the place and made their escape before they could be caught up with after being seen coming out from an enclosed porch.

Laurel Camp No. 1796 of the R. N. A. of Orland Park will sponsor a card and bunco party in the Creer Hall, November 15th at 2 p. m. Prizes and refreshments. Everyone is invited.

The Ladies Aid of the Christ Lutheran church held their annual supper and bazaar on Thursday night. The affair was very well attended and was reported quite a success socially and financially.

Mrs. Frank Moore who suffered a dislocated shoulder caused by a fall in her home, is getting along quite nicely.

The local dart ball enthusiasts are preparing for a busy season during the coming winter months. The local team plays in Tinley Park this week-end.

Orland Park High School News.
The Basketball team played its first game with Frankfort at Frankfort Wednesday evening.

The Dramatic Club met Tuesday evening. A playlet entitled "Turkey Red" was chosen to be presented at a school assembly on the Wednesday evening before Thanksgiving Day. The Club has decided to have try-outs for all parts taken in plays this year.

The High School Art Class is now busy making border designs. They are drawn and shaded first by pencil, then with India ink and finally with crayolas.

The Orland Park Science Club has been invited to exhibit photographic prints along with other youthful photographers thruout the United States at the annual Scholastic Salon of Photography to be held by the American Institute Science and Engineering Clubs from February 17th to 25th, 1940.

This Salon will be the third national exhibition of photographic work of junior and senior high school students and camera club members. Four hundred prints representing all sections of the United States were exhibited at the Salon last spring.

Under the supervision of a committee representing The Institute and the Camera Clubs in many large schools, the Salon is conducted on the same basis as are the great professional shows. Only those pictures which, in the opinion of the judges, meet the standard of technical and artistic skill will be admitted for exhibition.

Awards will be made by a judging committee of professional experts and there is the strong likelihood that prize winning prints will find their way to the World's Fair in 1940.

Members of camera clubs everywhere and junior and senior high school students interested in good photography are urged to write the American Institute, 60 East 42nd Street, New York City for the Salon rules and an entry blank. The booklet which gives information including date for entries is January 31, 1940.

Roller Skating Derby Honors Go To Canadian Team

Honors for Thursday night's racing at the Roller Derby, going into its third night tonight at the Coliseum, Wabash and 15th streets, went to the visiting Canadian team who garnered thirteen points to the Chicago squad's ten. The home-town-ers managed to hold on to a one point lead, however, the score for the meet, which has another nine days to go, being 24 to 23.

Fast and furious skating during every moment of the three hour grind was the rule last night. Freddy Lindstrom former national league baseball star and now head referee for the Roller Derby, levied penalties thick and fast as the eight-wheeled roller aces began disregarding the rules in their eagerness to gain points. Bill Bogash, lightning-fast male half of the famous "mother and son" team, spent a total of nine minutes in the penalty box, a fact, which, according to observers, aided the Canadians materially in gaining the greatest number of points.

According to official Roller Derby rules, any skater spending a total of twelve minutes in the penalty box during one evening's skating is banished from the track for the duration of the night's competition.

Perhaps the most outstanding thing about this race that has been decided to date is the almost equal strength of the two teams participating. Chicago's star skaters, including Bill Bogash, Ivy King, Jonney Rosasco, and Peggy O' Neal, are finding their matches in Canada's Mickey Milane, Joe Nygra, Jeanne Goette, and Grace Fried. It's still "anybody's race," and you may be sure that the next nine nights of skating (from 8:00 p. m. until 11:00 p. m. nightly) will see plenty of excitement for all concerned.

Following the meet now in progress, the Chicago team will meet the New York Gardens squad for the duration of the Chicago stay, which lasts until November 19th.

PROBATE NOTICE

Estate of John Facey, Deceased.
The undersigned having been appointed Administrator of the estate of John Facey, late of the City of Joliet, in the County of Will and State of Illinois, deceased, and having filed an Inventory listing other real estate not previously inventoried or accounted for, hereby gives notice that he will appear before the Probate Court of Will County, at the Court House in Joliet, in February Term, 1940 on the first Monday in February next (being the fifth day of said month), at which time all persons having claims against said estate are notified and requested to attend for the purpose of having the same adjusted. Early Stock Entries From Mokena and New Lenox Farms

Will county is the 29th county from which entries have been received, to date, for the 1939 International Live Stock Exposition.

The first entries from Will county were made by Chester Ebert, of Mokena, who will exhibit his purebred Shorthorn steer that was breed champion at the Illinois State Fair this year, and by Charles J. Francis, of New Lenox, who also lists a Shorthorn that was a blue ribbon winner at the Will County Fair. Both will compete in the exposition's junior live stock feeding contest.

The exposition will be held December 2 to 9 in the International Amphitheatre at the Chicago Stock Yards. It will be its 40th anniversary.

According to the management, a huge entry is expected in all divisions of the exposition this year. They base their expectation on the unusual large number of exhibits that have been listed well in advance of the entry closing date, which for the live stock classes is November 1.

Cash prizes will total over $100,000 at this year's show, it is announced. They will be awarded in the competitions for 30 different breeds of beef cattle, horses, sheep, and swine.

Entries for the 21st annual International Grain and Hay Show, the continent's largest exhibition of corn small grain, seeds, and hay, which will be held in connection with the exposition, will close on November 20, officials of this department state.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Care of Lamp Shades.—Silk and parchment lamp shades should be dusted frequently with a soft brush or the vacuum cleaner.

Improving Veal Roast.—Veal roasts are improved by rubbing them with powdered ginger, black pepper and onion salt before cooking.

Blending Fruit Juices.—Grapefruit juice blends well with pineapple and raspberries. This combination is good served as a cocktail or partially frozen for dessert.

Fitting Candles.—A candle may be made to fit any candlestick if dipped for a moment into very hot water. This will soften the wax and it can then be easily pushed in.

When Baking Apple Pies.—To prevent the juice in apple pies from boiling over during baking, mix the apples and sugar and let them stand covered for five minutes, then drain off the juice from the apple slices.

Shoes That Pinch.—If a patent shoe pinches any part of the foot, a rag well soaked in boiling water should be placed over the part. If this is done while the foot is in the shoe, the leather will soften to the shape of the foot.

How To Relieve Bronchitis

Bronchitis, acute or chronic, is an inflammatory condition of the mucous membranes lining the bronchial tubes. Creomulsion goes right to the seat of the trouble to loosen germ-laden phlegm, increase secretion and aid nature to soothe and heal raw, tender, inflamed bronchial mucous membranes. Tell your druggist to sell you a bottle of Creomulsion with the understanding that you are to take the way it quickly allays the cough or you are to have your money back.

SATURDAY NIGHT MEAT PIE

See Recipes Below.

Hurry-Up Meals

What a feeling of satisfaction it creates to be able to confront the family with an attractive and substantial meal, even after a long afternoon of shopping or of bridge. It takes a bit of planning to accomplish that!

A selection of "Hurry-Up-Menus," planned to economize on time, without sacrificing quality, is the answer to that problem. Choose foods which can be prepared for cooking several hours in advance. A casserole dish requiring little cooking is a wise selection for the main dish of your meal; or, if you like, plan a broiler dinner or "grill" which can be cooked in little more time than it takes to set the table.

Appetite teasing meals, and meals that can be put together in only a few minutes' time, can be built around these popular and satisfying main dishes. In most instances all that's required to complete them is bread, a beverage, and a simple fresh fruit dessert.

Hasty Oven Baked Beans.

(Serves 6)

1 large can baked beans
¼ pound bacon
¼ cup light brown sugar
2 tablespoons tomato catsup
Pour ½ can of baked beans in greased baking casserole. Dice ¼ slices bacon and sprinkle over the beans. Add catsup, and then cover with remainder of baked beans. Sprinkle with brown sugar, and top with bacon strips. Bake in hot oven (400 degrees) for 30 minutes. Serve at once.

Hasty Noodles.

(Serves 6)

1 package noodles
8 slices bacon
2 eggs (well beaten)
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon pepper
Cook the noodles in boiling, salted water until tender. Drain, and place in a slow oven to keep warm. Pan fry the bacon until crisp, and remove from drippings, and cut into small pieces. Drain off all but two tablespoons of the bacon fat, then place the bacon and noodles in the frying pan. Add well-beaten eggs and seasoning, and cook, folding gently, over a low fire for about five minutes, or until the eggs are set. Serve very hot. A crisp salad makes an excellent accompaniment for this meal.

Corn and Mushroom Omelet.

(Serves 6)

1 No. 2 can corn
3 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon baking powder
2 tablespoons diced green pepper
1 can button mushrooms
1 tablespoon flour
2 tablespoons butter
Drain the corn. Separate eggs. Add salt to egg yolks and beat until very thick. Add baking powder to egg whites and beat until stiff. Fold egg whites into the egg yolk mixture. Add corn and green pepper and mix lightly. Pour into a hot buttered frying pan and cook slowly until omelet is browned and thoroughly cooked through. Dry lightly in warm oven (300 degrees). Drain mushrooms and dredge with flour. Sauté in melted butter. Pour mushrooms over the omelet, fold, and place on hot platter. Serve immediately.

Mixed Grill.

(Serves 5)

¼ pound sliced bacon
1 pound pork sausages
5 fresh tomatoes
1 No. 2 can French lima beans
1 No. 2 can pineapple rings
Broil bacon and sausages. Hollow out tomatoes and fill with French lima beans. Top with buttered bread crumbs and bake until tomato shells are tender but will still hold their shape. Fry pineapple rings in butter. Serve as mixed grill and garnish with sprigs of parsley.

All-in-One Dinner.

(Serves 6)

6 link sausages
1 large onion (chopped fine)
2 tablespoons green pepper (minced)
½ pound ground beef
½ pound ground pork
1 No. 2 can tomatoes
1 No. 2 can kidney beans
½ cup uncooked rice
½ cup hot water
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Brown the sausages in a heavy frying pan. Remove, and drain off all but ¼ cup of the fat. Sauté the onion and the green pepper in the fat. Then add the ground meat and cook until brown. Add remaining ingredients, cover, and cook until the rice is tender (about 35 minutes). During the last 15 minutes, reheat the sausages on top of the mixture. Serve with a green salad.

Grilled Ham Sandwiches.

Toast slices of bread and place thin slices of ham on untoasted side of bread. Cover with cheese slices and spread with prepared mustard. Top with slices of fresh tomato and grill under broiler until cheese melts. Serve with watercress and stuffed olives.

Saturday Night Meat Pie.

4 tablespoons onion (minced)
1 pound ground beef
1 can condensed tomato soup
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
Pastry for 2-crust pie
Butter (melted)
Cook the onions in a little butter until soft. Add the ground beef and cook until barely brown. Blend in the soup. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, and mix. Line pie pan with rich pastry, rolled to ¼-inch thickness. Moisten the edges of the crust with cold water. Fill the pie shell with the meat mixture. Cover with the top crust, prick top, brush with melted butter, and bake in a 375 degree oven for one hour, or bake in a hot oven (450 degrees) for 15 minutes, then decrease heat to 350 degrees and bake 15 minutes longer.

What is the first thought that comes to your mind when you think of "entertaining"? Hard work? Expense? Formality? It should mean none of these! Rather, that word "entertaining" stands for friendliness, and warmth, and sociability. Eleanor Howe will tell you next week how to make entertaining easy. Be sure to look for the article, "Let's All Have Tea."

Corner Shields Are Big Help in Cleaning Rooms

Hard-to-clean corners can be conquered for the housewife through installation of supple metal shields which, when pushed into the angle will eliminate the business of keeping corners free of dirt and dust. Especially suitable for the corners of shelves, the shields can be painted over to escape notice. No nails or screws are necessary for installation, as the shields contain metal teeth which clamp to the surface and secure it firmly.

Fanny's Title

By BUD OVERMAN

(Associated Newspapers—WNU Service.)

FANNY REGAL had always lived with her aunt and uncle in a medium-priced apartment. She had studied music and art and elocution (called expression, which was too strong a word entirely for the instruction she had!) and had been prepared hopefully by her aunt for a legacy that had been long looked for.

And now the legacy had come! Uncle Regal quickly bought in Fanny's name a beautiful country estate some thirty miles out of the city, according to the genial realtor who closed the deal.

"And now, Fanny," said Aunt Regal, "your estate is much, much larger than we hoped it might be, and there is no use in letting yourself be married off to some commoner. You will marry a title. You can well afford it, dear. And I'll get you the title, see?"

And, sure enough, they hadn't been in the new house two weeks before a prince was invited to visit them for the week-end.

"So lucky you've been trained to sing a little and play a little and speak nice pieces," said her aunt to Fanny. "It will stand you in good stead now that you are to marry into royalty, my dear."

"Oh, but, aunt!" expostulated Fanny with a pretty blush. "Nothing is settled yet, you know. Why, I haven't even seen this prince of yours and he hasn't seen me."

"Well, I must say," admitted her aunt, "he certainly isn't much for looks. Skinny old thing, to tell the truth. But when he sees you, my dear—you're remarkably pretty, you know—and then with the pennies you have . . ."

"It's a pity that the head gardener isn't a prince," mused Fanny.

She looked at the gardener wistfully. She found occasion to ask him how hollyhocks were planted and taken care of.

"You like hollyhocks?" asked the gardener gravely.

"Oh, yes," said Fanny. "When I was a little girl, Sims, we had a book at home showing English gardens, and they always seemed to have tall hollyhocks nodding in such a gracious manner. Of course, that sounds silly—but they did look like that—really!"

"It doesn't seem a bit silly to me," he replied, as he bent over some very fine bulbs he was planting himself. "Weston! Wheel the barrow over fifty yards west there—to that bed I've been having smoothed."

"Don't talk to these gardeners, child," scolded her aunt. "They charge you an incredible sum for the work anyhow. Why that head gardener has a college degree, if you'll believe it."

And so Fanny found that Sims would talk a little about college and hollyhocks and the bugs that bother rose bushes.

The night that the prince arrived found Fanny weeping stormily in the garden pergola. "Skinny old thing!" she wailed between sobs.

"Who?" demanded a voice at her elbow.

And then she was telling Sims all about it, and some way or other his arms went around her to comfort her and pretty soon—well, well—these things will happen—he kissed her! And Fanny, having been brought up very strictly by her watchful aunt, considered themselves engaged immediately and Sims willingly agreed to hustle right off after a wedding license. In fact, he was more than willing.

And when they came back next morning to the estate Fanny expected her aunt to marvel at the romance of it all. Instead her uncle told Winfield Sims that he was a rascally fortune hunter.

"As far as that doggoned prince was concerned," said Uncle Regal to Fanny, quite as if her husband were not there at all, "you didn't miss a thing. It seems he gave his real name all right, but I had some detectives look him up, and, say! He didn't have a title any more'n I have—the faker! Why, he'd served time in a penitentiary—and he—"

"Oh, oh, oh!" laughed Fanny. "I believe I'm going to be a character reader or whatever they're called. I didn't like his looks at all and Win didn't like him either. Did you, Win?"

Winfield Sims did not hear his new wife. He was staring with horror-stricken eyes at a telegram that a servant had just put into his hands. "My—my brother has been killed—hunting. They cabled the New York lawyer and he telegraphed that I—I must go home at once."

"Did you think so much of this brother?" asked Aunt Regal uneasily as she looked at his suddenly deep-lined face.

"I haven't seen him for eight years," confessed Winfield. "But, you see, it will take Fanny away from you—I'll inherit the title now and I'll just about have to live at home to take charge of things. You see, I wanted to make my own way and I decided on expert gardening. I never thought of inheriting the title because there is only eighteen months' difference in age between Steven and me. Poor Steven! Will you mind—much—living abroad, Fanny, darling?"

And so, after all, Aunt Regal had her way and Fanny married a title.

CUT STRAIGHT BANDS 2" WIDE. TURN AND PRESS EDGES; THEN STITCH AS SHOWN

Blue denim with red bands for a boy's bed.

"STURDY and masculine." Al- so, "Red trimmings, please." That was the order for the bedspread in the combination work-and-play room of a 10-year-old lad. Blue and tan predominated in the room. The clever mother made curtains for the rather large square window; using lunch cloths in these colors—one cloth making a pair of curtains.

Blue denim with red gingham bands is suggested for the spread. The diagram may be used as a guide for cutting and making a spread of any width. The amount of material needed will be three times the full width of the finished spread, plus two inches. Two seams covered by bands run straight across the width of the spread. The two lengthwise bands may be close together or far apart according to the width of the bed. The corners at the foot are cut out as shown. The edges are then pressed to the right side and bands stitched over them.

NOTE: Readers who are now using Sewing Books No. 1, 2 and 3 will be happy to learn that No. 4 is ready for mailing; as well as the 10 cent editions of No. 1, 2 and

SELLING TALK

A. W. Franklin, secretary of the United Commercial Travelers of America, said at a dinner in Columbus:

"All commercial travelers should have the gift of persuasion, but few can ever hope to equal young Beddoes."

"A junior partner, as he came into the office, nodded toward the retreating figure of young Beddoes and said to his senior:

"I see you've taken on a new salesman. Is he good?"

"Good?" the senior partner said. "In the half hour he's been with us he almost talked me into taking him into the firm as senior partner. Nothing but your opportune arrival saved me."

Correct Constipation Before—Not After!

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of emergency relief. Why let yourself suffer those dull lifeless days because of constipation, why bring on the need for emergency medicines, when there may be a far better way? That way is to KEEP regular by getting at the cause of the trouble.

If it's common constipation, due to lack of "bulk" in the diet, a pleasant, nutritious, ready-to-eat cereal—Kellogg's All-Bran—goes straight to the cause by supplying the "bulk" you need.

Eat this crunchy toasted cereal every day—with milk or cream, or baked into muffins—drink plenty of water, and see if you don't forget all about constipation. Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.
